4 Introduction

Meghalaya, in the North-eastern part of India, has an area of 22,429 sq. km and a population of 29,66,889 as per the 2011 census. The projected population in 2021 is approximately 38 lakhs at a decadal growth rate of 27.9%. A majority (over 80%) of the state's population lives in rural areas, with the exception of the East Khasi district, where only 58% lives in rural areas. The state has a highly mountainous terrain with 12 hill districts tucked away in the hills. The population density in the state is only 132 persons/ sq. km. far less than the national average. The state is mainly characterized by remote rural settlements and villages. This, when combined with the mountainous terrain, makes accessibility of facilities such as laying power distribution lines difficult and expensive.

Grid connectivity and access to electricity is a problem that impacts a majority of the predominantly rural population in state. Frequent power outages are also a cause of concern which impacts the population even when connected to the grid. The rough terrain and prevalence of rainfall in the state also makes operation and maintenance of power distribution lines difficult. Meghalaya is a highly resource rich state and is projected to grow at 11.52% as per the State Budget FY 2023-2024. However, access to electricity is a critical factor which will impact the economic growth. The state's power generation capacity has been insufficient to meet its growing demand, leading to frequent power outages in some areas. To compound the matter the vagaries of monsoon put the state power sector under great strain during the lean season when the water discharge in the rivers and reservoirs are all time low.

It is a cause of grave concern that the prevalent power poverty is a serious issue across the state. There is an urgent need to address this issue given its direct impact on social development parameters such as health, education, and livelihood. Renewable energy can address the issues of availability and accessibility of power to a significant extent. Meghalaya lies in an ecologically sensitive region, hence the sources of electricity, and power distribution should be such that it does not cause any adverse impacts on the ecology of the state. In order to promote clean and sustainable growth and access to power, the focus should thus be on renewable energy sources to cater to the energy needs of the state. Due to the hilly nature of the state's terrain and remote nature of villages and settlements, feasibility of Solar Power, is high and suitable for the energy needs of homes providing clean and affordable energy for a large section of Meghalaya's population. This would result in energy security, improved access to services and greater productivity for the majority of the state's population. Keeping these factors in mind, the state government has decided to launch the CM Solar Mission to provide energy security to the people.

The scheme aims to provide standalone power systems to beneficiaries with hybrid solar inverters and solar water heaters. A hybrid solar inverter combines the capabilities of a conventional inverter, a battery charger, and a solar charge controller in a single device. This kind of inverter functions with grid electricity and solar panels, making it possible to easily incorporate renewable energy into a household's power system. The inverter can convert to backup battery mode in the case of a power failure to keep vital loads powered. The CM Solar Mission offers a range of capacities to cater to diverse needs. For small households with lower electricity requirements and PMAY beneficiaries, 850 VA inverters are being offered. Also, 1.7 kVA system will be available for small households and PMAY beneficiaries. Medium- sized households can benefit from the 3 kVA systems, while 5 kVA systems are being provided to large households. 25 kVA systems are being offered for schools, MSMEs, poultry farms, Khadi industries, hospitals, PM Employment Generation Programme (PMEGP) beneficiaries, and CSCs. 40 kVA systems are being provided to hospitals, hotels, clubs, large scale factories, offices, colleges. By providing this range of options, it is being ensured that every individual and institution can benefit from this sustainable solution. Additionally, 1.1 kVA and 2.2 kVA systems with fans and lighting are being provided to Schools.

Access to clean and affordable energy has direct correlation with MPI (Multi -Dimensional Poverty Index). The scheme is expected to have a multiplier effect on society as a whole. It will enable the state towards green transition and is in alignment with Sustainable Development Goal-7(Access to affordable and clean energy).
